

ARRIVAL OF THE TENNESSEE FROM ASPINWALL

New York, Feb. 21

The steamship Tennessee, from Aspinwall, via San Juan and Key West, arrived this evening, bringing three hundred and fifteen passengers, and $36 000 in specie. She left Aspinwall on the evening of the 16th.

The ship Meteor, from Mobile to Liverpool, had put into San Juan in a bad condition.

The Tennessee left San Juan before the Texas which has already arrived at New Orleans.

Col. Titus with his recruits went up the river with Col. Lockbridge, and took a position opposite the enemy, at San Pi Pague.

Col. Lockbridge had made all the necessary arrangements, and the attack was to be made on the day the Tennessee left.

Col. L.'s force was stated at five hundred and fifty men, and that of the Costa Ricans at three hundred men.

The affairs at Rivas and St. George, between Gen. Banningsen's command and the Costa Ricans, are differently stated than in the accounts by the Texas.

In the fight near Rivas Captain Phinney was killed and the Americans suffered other losses, but it does not appear which party was victorious.

Gen. Henningsen's attack on St. George was made with four hundred men, the enemy having, it was stated, fifteen hundred. After several hours' fighting, Gen. Henningsen retired, as stated, with inconsiderable loss excepting that several of his officers were wounded, including Col. Jacques and Major Duseberry.

The Costa Rican loss is supposed to have been great.

Gen. Bosquet was killed.

At the last advice the Nicaraguans had drawn off and were in the vicinity of Granada, awaiting the arrival of ammunition from Greytown.

The last accounts from Gen. Walker are to Feb. 3. He was at San Juan del Sur, with three hundred men. He had established his head quarters at Rivas, and was concentrating all his force there, amounting to eight hundred men.
