

The Explosion of Steamer Reindeer.

From the clerk of the steamer Belle Sheridan we learn the following particulars with respect to the explosion of the Reindeer :

On the 13th inst., at about 10 o'clock P. M., as the Reindeer, Capt. Montgomery, was rounding off from Carrollton, she became entangled with a canal boat, which careened her very much on one side, thereby causing the water to run from one of the boilers to the others ; and this caused two of the flues to collapse, spreading death and destruction fore and aft. Nearly all those on deck, both forward and aft the boilers, were severely and dangerously scalded.

The mate, David Mullen, was struck on the head by a piece of iron and instantly killed. Frederick Ludwig, second engineer, was badly scalded.

Immediately after the explosion, the bell was rung, and the steamer Europa came to her assistance, in attempting which she was considerably injured. The Magnolia also went alongside, and towed the ill fated vessel to Hawesville. The officers, with the exception of the mate and engineer, escaped, and none of the cabin passengers were hurt, except Samuel L. Hyatt, of St. Louis, who was scalded.

There were two families on deck, who were nearly all destroyed. Since the catastrophe, thirty have died, and little hopes are entertained of the rest of the wounded. On Tuesday, at 3 o'clock, seven loads of the mutilated bodies were conveyed to the burial-ground and interred.

We give a list of the sufferers :
