THE GREAT SHOW.

The elephant of the Radical managers, now on a tour of exhibition through the North. "Dr. P. B. Randolph, of New Orleans," turns out to be an unabridged bumbug.

This able individual proves to be a "professor" of the art tonsorial, whose former abiding place was Oneida, N. Y. Like his illustrious co-adjuvants, Brownlow, Warmoth, et. al., he has undertaken to represent a class of persons whose existence in the South is mythical.

As Fred. Douglass' domicile was too well known, the managers of this collection of hydrid curiosities, could not secure his services, to represent the class of "intelligent loyal" negroes of the South, so they were compelled to find some one, whom they could palm upon the Radical masses as a genuine specimen, and for this reason they engaged this "gentleman" of Ethiopian extraction.

When this soothed individual first made his debut in the rôle of the educated darky, we were regretting that same gentleman's former, indulged body servant, should have had his good manners corrupted by association with Hamilton, and that ilk. We are relieved to discover that this "star" is a peripatetic knight of the razor, who hails from a northern inland town.

The blackamoor in question, has evidently been "putting money into his purse," as he has been collecting funds in New York, Philadelphia, and other northern cities, wherewith to establish "high-grade colored schools in New New Orleans." He has doubtless discovered that "loyalty" has made many people rich, in the last five years, and therefore, he has taken to it. Success is guaranteed to him by his color, which is all the rage in that section. The illustrious representative (?) from Arkansas seems to be only an insignificant wheep in the "show:" he has not as yet uttered a howl. We hope his keeper will stir him up soon, as an oratorical effort of Fenney's would, we are sure, afford amusement to the various audiences before which the troops appear.

The farce should be made a complete success, and if they cannot make anything out of Fenney, they should improve a stranger representative for Arkansas, of a more popular hue.
