On the anniversary of Benjamin Franklin's birth, the committee arranged an entertainment for the benefit of the Negro Orphan Society at the Exchange Hotel. At the head of this event was Frederick Douglass, who spoke on the occasion, and the Negro Orphan Society was formed.

It was well conducted, and held under the stimulus of the Committee of Vigilance, which had organized the event. The Negro Orphan Society was formed.

During the Mexican War, he bore his part on the field of battle, and was known to his friends as a hero. He was a man of high moral character, and his death was a great loss to the community. He is remembered for his kindness and generosity, and for his love of humanity.
