

SENSIBLE.—M. P. B. Randolph (colored,) has lately arrived in this city from a long tour in Europe and Africa, and is going to lecture to his colored brethren on the subject of immigrating to India. Mr. B. thinks that here the negro is destined to extinction, which is a very sensible conclusion. The inferior negro race, like the inferior Indian existing among the whites on terms of comparative equality, is destined to die out, in other words to be extinguished by the superior energy of the white man. It is a universal law, and when niggers get their freedom among the stern Anglo-Saxons, it is merely the freedom to gradually, but surely, die out, or be overcome by the superior mentality of the whites. A few mongrels may occasionally show some energy, some talent, but it would not last more than one generation — N. Y. Day Book.
