
$30,000 Prize Drawn by a Slave.

Yesterday, in Louisville, a negro man, the property of I. R. Greene, a lawyer, drew the capital prize in the Kentucky State Lottery—$30,000. He had, however, sold half the ticket to a young man by the name of Edward Thomas, a lottery-ticket vender, and of course received but half the prize. His master, on learning the luck of his slave, waived all claim to the property, but advised him to buy himself, his wife and two children. The darkey took him at his word, paid $500 for himself, and placed the money for his family in the hands of another person, to await the price affixed by two arbiters, chosen for that purpose.—*Gen.
