Trial of Daniel E. Sickles for the killing of Philip Barton Key.

CRIMINAL COURT-T. H. CRAWFORD, Judge.

NINETEENTH DAY-MONDAY. At half past nine o'clock this morning, quite a crowd had collected in the court-house, and the chances of a speedy termination of the trial were discussed pro and con. Among those present in-side the bar were John Mitchel, Esq., Milton Whitney, Esq., State Prosecutor of Maryland; side the bar were John Mitchel, Esq., Milton Wnitney, Esq., State Prosecutor of Maryland: toneral Churchill, U. S. A., and others, attracted doubtless by the prospect of hearing Mr. Brady. At ten o'clock the jury entered, looking in unusual good spirits. Indeed, a general air of cheer tothess pervaded the contr-room, induced doubtless by the prospect of a speedy conclusion to this now tedious trial.

Crawford announced, on reaching his the found a letter on his desk for Mr. Hopkins, a jurer. No objection being made, the letter was given

No objection being made, the letter was given to Mr. Hopkins.

At half-post 10 the prisoner was brought in and the jury called.

Mr. Brady then rose, amid profound silence, and, after expressing his sense of the kindness and courtesy he had met with in this court during his presence here, proceeded to speak in favor of the privers asked for by the defence.

Mr. Brady said that he should confine himself to cround not touched mon by his colleague. He to ground not touched upon by his colleague. He chimed that the instructions asked were not of a parely abstract nature, as had been asserted on the other side.

He proceeded to comment upon the opening of the District Attorney, especially in his description of Mr. Siekles proceeding as a walking magazine to meet Mr. Key, an unarined man, knowing him to be unarined—a description, he said, exaggerated and unsustained.

In regard to what was the exact province of the univ. he expressed a hope to hear further from the unstrict Attorney and from the Court. He quoted from State against Croteau, 23d Vermont Reports, p. to, to show that a jury in a criminal trial have the legal right to judge the law as well as the fact—the whole matter in issue. In Massochusetts, he admitted the contrary was determined, and also that the counsel are not to argue to the jury in this respect. He referred also to page 25 of Herbert's case, where this Court had accorded to the jury the right to judge as to a certain state of facts; also, on pages 29 and 30 to the same effect.

case, where this Court had accorded to the jury the right to judge as to a certain state of facts; also, on pages 29 and 30 to the same effect.

Mr. Brady contended against the insignificant sphere of duty allotted to the jury under rulings to the contrary. Turning his attention to the fatal Sunday, and looking at the relations between the actors, both personal friends, both lawyers; in view of the fact that Mr. Sickles had shown so many acts of friendship to Mr. Key, no one could suppose that Mr. Sickles could have walked out of his house in the broad light of day to commit an assassination upon that friend.

So long as the earth exists this trial would be remembered, and all the actors in it. What were the undisputed facts as to this meeting? They are seen together in lond conversation—a tussle ensure together in lond conversation—a tussle ensure together in lond conversation of Key, seems together and fires a number of shots, but low many, or what the position of Key, seems together doubt. Key is taken away, and afterwards an opera glass is found upon the spot and a Derringer pixel. Whose pixel was this? No witness testifies that Sickles had any other than a revolving pixel. It is an absolute presumption of law that this tob belonged to Mr. Key, and was used by him. He called attention to the fact that not a witness of all Key's funity, friends or assocates, has dered to say, or has been asked or pernetted to say that this pistol did not belong to Key.

In reference to the first instruction, that there

In reference to the first instruction, that there is no malice presumable in this case, there being elieviation, he quoted from United States agt. Mingo, 2 Curtes, C. C. Rep., first case in the volume, where Mingo gave three stabs to Johnson with a sheath knife. Is there any Aitness here to say that the deceased did not answer insultingly the first words of Sickles on their meeting, and area throwing away the opera-glass which he had arawn for another purpose, draw this Derringer postol for a purpose more deadly?

Another view of the case. The bullet produced in this case does not in the Derringer pistol, but the revolver. Where is the bullet from that freshly-discharged Derringer pistol? He quoted from Indge Curtus's charge to the jury in Mingo's case, where it was held that the burden of the proof rested on the prosecution, and that it was incumbent on the Government to prove a folonious killing. That case was not more confused than the present one. That good-looking young witness, (Mr. Delaneld) persisted in testifying directly to the contrary of all the other witnesses in this case. The specker never saw Mr. Key but once. He supposed no one who had ever seen Mr. Key, or who knew him, would doubt that he would fight, and the inference is that he was ready to do so on this occasion. Quoting again from Mingo's case, who was acquitted, he proceeded to the case of Day, where the Court held an exception to the ruling that the burden of proof must fall upon the prisoner.

Again the fact that four shots are proven in this case, and only three from the pistol of Mr. Sickles.

Again the fact that four shots are proven in this

Again the fact that four shots are proven in this case, and only three from the pistol of Mr. Sickles. Another eircumstance showed that the gentlemen understood the thing as he did, and that was that when the personal friends of Key came to where Key was lying and heard from Sickles the provocation he had, they allowed him to pass away unmolested, no one calling for an officer, or crying sizure. Or emurder.

Now, on the sabject of provocation, as connected with the lifth instruction asked by the defence. The speaker thought this instruction embodied these decisions of this court which had been made in previous similar cases. He supposed that upon the whole evidence the defence had in this case inducred strictly to the law, as previously laid d wn by his honor. The case of Ryan was one dreetly in point, and was the one on which this lifth instruction had been complimented by Mr. Carlisie for the adroitness with which they had drawn up their instructions. Disclaiming the compliment, Mr. B. thought that for adroitness and sagacity his friend, Mr. Carlisle, had no superior.

The idea that cooling time was a question to be compliment. Mr. Manda Mr. Carlisle, had no superior.

The idea that cooling time was a question to be determined by the Court, as stated by the prosecution, was, with great deference to them totally wind entirely incorrect, for the same authority which made the decision on this point, stated that it was wholly with the jury to determine the extent of cooling time. In that connection this, pelat must be considered thoroughly and impartantly by the jury.

As to the waving of the handkerchief—a handker hief the color of which with the most savage tribes of earth had always been held as the emblem of purity, hospitality, and trathfulness, the speaker proceeded in eloquent figure to say that had the decased been actuated by the same feeling with Els noble father, he would never have shown such a vile substitute for the glorious folds of the "Star Spangled Banner!" [Sensation] This raised up before us that question of adultery and its consequences. It brings us to the suggestion of Mr Stanton that the common law of this District was the common law best suited to the wants and habits of the people here.

the common law best suited to the Wanis and habits of the people here.

Here the speaker read an abstract of what he sad might be called the law of humanity upon coultery, which he stated had been furnished him by a gentleman whose name be was proud to use in such a connection—that of Prof. Dimitry.

This abstract showed in hiref terms what had been the punishment allotted to adultery by all nations during all previous time.

While the defence had been compelled to use the name of Mrs. S. in this trial, it was not wrong that there should be some lingering hope that she was not entirely lost.

vas not entirely lost.

It was a redeeming feature of the prisoner's case was not entirely lost.

It was a redeeming feature of the prisoner's case here, that amid the agony of his mind in that dreadful hour, when stayed by the officers from going to his wife's room, through fear that he would nee some violence towards her, that he had that sense of human forbearance about him that enabled him to piedge himself that no further barm should come near her.

The suggestion that the party thus injured must full back on an action for damages, was one which had excited disgust in the minds of the most illustrate this idea, Mr. B. read from an essay of Judge Talicurd, once a sergeant Talfourd, afterwards a distinguished judge on the English bench. This crought the speaker to the sixth proposition of the defence, that if Key was shot by Sickles while in a minal intercourse with the wife of the latter, he (Sickles) cannot be convicted of either murder or musicaughter.

Mr. H. read from the case of Sherbock; also, as

Sickles cannot be seen and the case of Sherlock; also, as some reference had been made in a leading newspaper to the law in France, from a case which occurred in France in 1857—the case of Lonfarie, tried for killing one Bruste, who had corrupted to the seen and the second of the s tried for Killing one Brusie, who had co-rupted to the Journal des Debets, and furnished to the speaker by Professor Departy. In the Canada case, referred to by Mr. Stanton on Saturdey, the adultery had been communicated to the husband sometime previously. The different went away and remained sometime, and the record of the control of the control of the control of the case of the control of rewards returned, and was defiberately shot own while taking a drink in a public bar-room, the manned man. He was tried and acquitted, he prosecution had denied that there was any certine in the Bible to sustain the slaying of the ballows he that headen?

decrine in the Bible to sustain the slaying of saddlerer by the husband.

Here Mr. B. read from Proverbs 6th chapter, 27th to 35th verses inclusive, as follows:

"Can a man take fire in his own bosom and his ciothes not be burned?"

Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be harmed?

So he that goeth in to his neighbor's wife;
wherever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

Men do not deepse a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry; but if he be found he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house.

But whose committeth adultery with a woman icketh understanding; he that doeth it destroyeth to over soul.

the rage of man. Therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance. He will not regard any reason; neither will he rest content, though thou giveth many gifts."

If he could tear open the grave; if he could summon a witness that had not been called; if he could place Philip Barton Key upon the stand, and mak him, in the name of his birth, of his education, of all the feelings he had derived from association with gentlemen, what would have been his course had a traitor entered his house, contaminated his wife, and disgraced his children? He would leave it to the counsel for the prosecution; he would leave it to the counsel for the prosecution; he would leave it to the relatives and friends of Key these sales. all the feelings' he had derived from association with gentlemen, what would have been his course had a traitor entered his house, contaminated his wife, and disgraced his children? He would leave it to the Court; he would leave it to the counsel for the prosecution; he would leave it to the counsel trives and friends of Key themselves, to say what would have been his answer? The moment when the mind of man becomes diseased no human being can perceive. And when we lie down for rest at night, we might as well attempt to watch for the moment when sleep overtakes the mind, as to attempt to say when insanity begins to stealover the mind.

The Court must have heard of instances where a The Court must have heard of instances where a man heretofore in the enjoyment of his mand had suddenly supposed hinself the selected instrument of Divine vengeance to extlipate some supposed wrong. All the defence asked in this case was the same instructions which the Court had given in the case of Day, and the points embraced in the clarge of Judge Allison to the jury in the case of Sherlock. Here the speaker read the charge in that case, from the Legal Journal.

In reference to the receipt of declarations as evidence to show insanity, the Court had laid down the law clearly in the case of Day; which decision Mr. B. read from the printed pamphlet.

Iamilton making a cool, deliberate speech just before he was to fight the fatal duel in which he lost his life, he claimed that Mr. Sickles likewise could be cool under somewhat similar circumstances. But he held that at the time these speeches were made Mr. Sickles really believed in the innocence of his wife. He held that all the emotions of the prisoner's nature were changed at the motoner the evidence became indisputable of his meeting.

of the prisoner's nature were changed at the moment the evidence became indisputable of his wife's guilt and of his friend. With this sense of injury he rushes out upon the street, and by his rapid walk and excited manner attracts the attention of witnesses.

On Saturday night, in feverish unrest, he paces his room; on Sunday morning, in the same condition, he sees key pass his house and wave his handkerchief. Then the prisoner, believing that Key is enticing his wife, rushes out. Key sees Sickles go one way round the square, and passes in the other direction towards Sickles house, supposing that he had cluded the hoxond, and is met in the other direction towards Sickles house, supposing that he had cluded the husband, and is met by him. If this is not taking him in the act of adultery what is? If Mr. Sickles did not use the weapon, (which he may have ordinarily worn,) what was he to do? To pass Key by and say egged morning." Had he not shot him down the speaker would scorn to know him more. [Applause.]

As to the cooling time, he contended that the term had no application here. The idea of cooliness in connection with the fresh provocation of that menting, he held to be impossible. With respect to the question of malice, Mr. B. quoted from the case of the State ogt, Hill, reported in Devereux's Reports, where the accused was a slave, and was tried for killing an overseer, to show that an immediate cause for the act of killing was a circumstance of exculpation.

In this case, at the very time of the killing when the friends of the deceased rushed up, the motive for the killing was abundantly shown by the expressions of the accused, and there was no presumption of preconceived malice about it. There was provocation of the very strongest character Here Mr. B. read from the opinion of the court in Will's case, at length; also, from 10th Humphrey, page 19, as bearing upon the same point—i. c, imalice.

In reference to the question of justification, Mr. B. supported his views of the point as bearing on this case by various citations from Blackstone's Commentaries, and contended that it was proper to prevent great crimes from being committed, by homicide. The prostitute may resist the ravisher to the death, yet it is claimed that a man may not resist an affrent put upon his honor.

He would have them look at Daniel E. Sickles, look at Teresa, who was his wife; look at her whom he (Mr. B.) knew in her childhood, and for whom he hoped, notwithstanding her sin, no more angoist than would be necessary to attain repentance; look at the child, innocent of the crime, but upon whom would fall the heavy weight of the judgment.

Then he proceeded to argue briefly that the control of the control sent of the wife afforded no justification for the adulterer, and thence to point out the inconsistency of the law which discriminated between the ravisher and the adulterer. As to the question of doubt whether there was any insanity or not, that doubt affected the case of the prosecution rather than the defence.

In respect of the greatness of the provocation, Mr. B. quoted from a number of authorities to show that this peculiar domestic affliction was greater in its effects upon the human mind than could be produced from any other cause, and also from the reports of inspectors of insane asylums, to show that more of their inmates had been brought to their condition of mental darkness through domestic affliction than from all other causes combined.

Mr. Brady here, with some happy allusions to the dramatis personae, the stars for defence, read from a manuscript a description, furnished by Mr. Meagher, of the remarkable scene exhibited in court when Mr. Walker was giving his evidence; and concluding by an impassioned address to the jury in behalf of the prisoner.

After reading this manuscript Mr. B. concluded by saying that in view of the relations which Mr. Sickles bore to his now lost wife, before he came to this city, and of the circumstances of her shame, he might have gone to any other place in the whole world, but he could never have returned to the city of New York and held up his head for a moment had he done anything other than that which he did in ridding the world of her destroyer.

Mr. B. stated that they hore on the same point which had been asked by Mr. Carisle in defending Jarboe, and which had been asked by Mr. Carisle in defending Jarboe, and which had been granted by the judge in that case. No better instruction for the defence could be framed.

Mr. B. went on to describe the maneuvers of Mr. Key in front of the honse of the accused, whick maneuvers and dodigings and spylings he characterized in severe terms. He compared his death to that of Major Andre, found as a spyling had to that of Major Andre, found as a spyling had been the great blive of the previous circumstances of the Court in Jarboe's case bote directly upon the greatest men that ever lived, for playing the spy. He was taken into the depot, and, upon examination, it was ascertained that the deceased was John B. Gilmer, of Virginia, a son of Secretary Gilmer, of President Tyler's Cabinet, who came to his death by the deplorable accident on the United States steamer Princeton. Coroner Woodward having summoned a jury to investigate the case, they returned a verdict that the said John B. Gilmer came to his death by voluntarily throwing himself across the railroad track at the Washington depot, the tender passing over him, killing him almost instantly, on the morning of the 25th of April, at half past 6 o'clock. The deceased had been several days in Washington, where he is well known, and is a frequent visitor. The body was delivered into possession of R. A. Pryor. Esq., an intimate friend of the family, who will have it properly prepared, and conveyed to Virginia for interment. and, before it could be prevented, the wheels of

At St. Patrick's church the same Mass was admirably performed by the choir, assisted by a number of good singers from other choirs, under the leadership of Prof. J. P. Caullield.

At the Offertory, one of Curschmann's beautiful tries, adapted for the occasion to the service, was rendered by members of the choir in a superior manner. During the morning upwards of nine hundred communicants partock of the blessed sacrament.

FOUND .- The dead body of Mr. Alfred Cassell, bricklayer, who has been missing from his home on the Island for twenty-one days, was discovered yesterday, by a Mr. Mahoney, where it had floated or been washed ashore, at or near the half-way or between this city and Alexandria, on the land of Mr Young. The appearance of the body was most revolting, it having from appearance been in the water for nineteen days, and was swollen to thrice its natural size, and in a state of putrefacin the water for nineteen days, and was swollen to thrice its natural size, and in a state of putrefaction. The position of the body indicated most unmistakably that the unfortunate man came to his death by his own deliberate act. A large sledge hammer, which was recognized as belonging to the deceased, was found tied inside his hat, by a rope, the other end of which was tied about the waist; and it is supposed, from the direction of the river current, that the deceased, after making his resurrations for death, must have leaped from the river current, that the deceased, after making his preparations for death, must have leaped from the Long Bridge at one or the other of the draws, and gradually washed to the position where the remains were found, by the force of the current, which has been very strong of late, by reason of the heavy rains. A rosary of beads, and a few scraps of paper bearing the name of the deceased, which were found in one of the pockets, placed his identity beyond question. A coffin was sent for, and the remains placed therein and removed at once to the vault of St. Patrick's church.

A TERRIFIC STORM .- The gale upon the Potomac on Saturday was the most terrific remembered here for twenty years past. The Alexandria steam-ers, and indeed all others except the southern mai crs, and indeed all others except the southern man boats, were compelled to lay at their wharves until nightfall, (when it subsided,) and it required the utmost exertions of all upon them to save them from great damage. Three schoeners, one of them a large fore-and-aft vestel, were completely swamped in the harbor, and every other craft here and at Alexandria were, for hours, in finninent danger. We shall doubtless soon near of extensive injury done down the river.
